

Britney Spears Annuls Brief Las Vegas Marriage

Britney Spears (news) was granted an annulment on Monday to end her surprise two-day marriage to a childhood friend, after the pop star told a Las Vegas judge in court papers that she and her new husband were "incompatible."

The Las Vegas judge signed the petition just hours after it was filed, Spears attorney David Chesnoff told reporters. He said the couple sought the annulment after realizing that they had not worked out the "serious issues" involved in marriage.

The court papers were filed under the name Britney Jean Spears just 12 minutes after Clark County District Court opened on Monday. They assert that the singer is "not currently pregnant" and ask that neither she or Jason Allen Alexander, who are both 22, get spousal support.

Representatives for Spears said in a statement that the marriage, which took place at a chapel on the Las Vegas strip, were a "joke" gone too far.

"Plaintiff Spears lacked understanding of her actions to the extent that she was incapable of agreeing to marriage because Plaintiff and Defendant did not know each other's likes and dislikes, each other's desires to have or not have children and each other's desires as to state of residency," the court papers said.

"Upon learning of each other's desires, they are so incompatible that there was a want of understanding of each other's actions in entering into this marriage."
